STOCK PERISHES WHEN BARN BURNS

Shortly after 11 o'clock Tuesday night, a barn the property of F. H. Goosman on Water street near Collins, was completely destroyed by fire, one horse, four hogs, a delivery wagon, two tons of hay and a large quantity of straw being destroyed.

When the alarm was given and firemen arrived, the building was a mass of flames. There was a deluge of rain and a strong wind blowing which fanned the flames. The work of the firemen was ineffectual, since the building presented simply a mass of flames. The inflammable material caused the heat to be so terrific that firemen could not enter the building. There was no chance to rescue the livestock.

The origin of the fire is not known. It seemed that the fire had started in the loft, which was filled with hay and straw, recently placed there. Mr. Goosman stated that he had but little if any insurance, and the loss is practically total. Its extent had not been figured at noon Wednesday.

This is the fourth fire within as many days, however, this was the most disastrous one.

And Still They Come

D. D. Schroeder, Louisville attorney and lifelong republican, has announced that he would cast his ballot this year for Cox and the League of Nations.

"I have given some study to the League of Nations and in my opinion it is merely a world expansion of the Monroe Doctrine. It will take away no power from Congress and will prevent war, I think."
